Play RTSP Media Streams Directly on Your Computer in Real Time. BitTorrent has an end-user license agreement that threatens penalties for those who use its software in the manner that its users currently use it. That end-user license agreement is also a means of attempting to void end-user contracts and user agreements in other areas such as the distribution of copyrighted works. We believe that this type of threat and legal harassment is illegitimate and must be challenged. While we are sorry that we have to make this statement, we are also pleased to acknowledge that this situation represents an opportunity to take the first step in identifying an Open and Free Software solution to this situation. The goal is to redesign BitTorrent to ensure that the end user can express intent to use a service in the manner they wish to use it, but that this intent does not unilaterally void the end user's license agreement and other agreements the user may have with the publisher, distributor, and other providers of copyrighted works. It is the hope of BitTorrent to support the development of alternatives that utilize these open licenses so that users can benefit from these technologies without losing the rights and protections of the licenses that they already hold. Following are definitions of some key terms that may be used in the description of BitTorrent and in other regions of this website: open source: software that is released into the public domain and may be freely accessed and distributed, with the copyright status of the code never restricted in any way. copyright: a legal right that gives creators of copyrighted works exclusive rights to prevent others from creating new works using the same or similar methods as their own, and to publicly display, perform, and distribute the works they create or receive. GNU General Public License (GPL): All rights (including copyright) in the GNU General Public License (GPL) are freely granted. Thus, anyone is legally permitted to modify and extend the software, and any such derivative works are also permitted. The copyright holders need not provide their permission for this modification or extension, but any such derivative work must itself adhere to the GPL so that it too is in the public domain. The copyright holders retain the moral right to control how their software can be used, or modified. The license consists of two parts: A license to exercise the rights provided. The rights are as follows: Redistribution and reproduction in source and binary forms, with or without modification, are permitted provided that the following conditions are met: Redistribution in b7e8fdf5c8
